

10. Archeological proof that the 385 Nephite war took place

1. The Jade stone that was located in the center of the war zone, told of a demise of a nation.
2. The cave, near the war zone, that contains the bones of sacrificed women and children that date back to the final Nephite war.

A photograph of a cave floor covered in human bones, likely a mass grave. The bones are scattered across a dark, uneven, and rocky surface. The lighting is dim, highlighting the textures of the bones and the cave floor.

This cave is near the southern border of the land of Cumorah, the land of the last war. It has the remains of the women and children that were sacrificed.

Mormon 4:21. . .the Nephites were driven and slaughtered with an exceedingly great slaughter; their women and their children were again sacrificed unto idols.

The Jade Stone that Told of the Demise of a Nation

A Jade stone was found at the Blue Creek archeological site that told of a demise of a nation. The Blue Creek site was situated in the center of the proposed land of Cumorah or where the final Nephite war took place. Around 500 A.D. this stone was put in shaft in order to protect it from invaders. This stone was created some time prior to the time before it was put into the shaft, possibly a hundred years earlier. Therefore it would have matched the timeframe of the demise of Nephites.

This is highly probable due to the fact that there never has been a complete demise of the Maya nation, only Nephites.

This stone was found in Belize and is similar to the one found at Blue Creek
