

This a very interesting picture of unique statue in Ceibal (Zarahemla)

- It is not considered as a Stela; it was fashioned in an anatomical way. Very uncharacteristic of the Maya
- It is considered to be a very important king.
- The material of the statue was made from a unique stone that came from a long distance, which adds to the importance of this Stela.
- The tools that the king is holding in his hand are farming tools. It is hard to understand why a king should have farming tools, when he should be living the life of a king.
- His boots are of a European style.
- The monkey face is a Maya traditions that represents a God from an early creation.
- It's possible that he was a king in the Book of Mormon that was honored at a later time.

